Childhood Obesity

In total, 1 out of every 5 children in the United States have obesity. The rates increase with age, and more than 40 percent of teens struggle with obesity by the time they reach 16-19 years of age. Slowly but relentlessly, the obesity epidemic has become a major threat to every child's ability to achieve their full potential as a healthy, productive adult.

Childhood obesity: prevention is better than cure

Why should we care about childhood obesity? There are two main reasons to target childhood obesity. First, overweight and obese children and teens are much more likely to become obese as adults compared to normal BMI children, and second, it is more challenging for these adults to lose the excess weight once they become obese.
