Eh? To Zed is a colourful and rhythmic alphabet book that uses distinctly Canadian words from the beginning to the end. Each letter is accompanied with several words starting with that same letter, as well as corresponding images. These images, created by Alan Daniel, are constructed together in a collage form. Following the alphabet are four detailed definition pages, which enable readers to learn the definitions of the words used in the abecedarium.

The predictable Canadian icons are there – maples, Expo, and mounties – but so are the more exotic Anik, ice blind, and Xenon. After the Z page (where I was pleased to learn that the zipper is a Canadian invention) is an engagingly written and particularly well-designed section in which the author and illustrator provide “morsels of information” on the content they selected.
